James completed his bachelor's degree with joint first-class honours in sociology and history at the University of New Brunswick in May 2012. He is currently studying for his master's degree at the University of New Brunswick. As a quantitative researcher with a focus on methodologies, his research will investigate the suitability and limitations of secondary data collected by governments as employed by domestic violence researchers. He has been a research assistant to Dr. Carmen Gill at the Muriel McQueen Fergusson Centre for Family Violence Research since March 2011 and attended a meeting with the Observatory in September 2011. Currently, he is converting government data, so that it may be used in the Observatory's database on accused persons.
